Princeton Semester in Greece is a new Princeton-led interdisciplinary semester abroad program, open to students from all disciplines. Participants will live and study in the unique urban environment of Athens, where international political debates, cultural dialogues, innovative scholarship and artistic creativity are as central to its modern identity as to its classical heritage.

All courses on the program are taught by Princeton faculty and fulfill several Princeton general education and departmental requirements:

- ART: "Venice in the Mediterranean" (LA), Professor Patricia Fortini Brown
- SOC: "Discipline in the Western Tradition: Classical Roots and Modernity" (HA), Professor Miguel Centeno
- PHI: "Plato in Athens" (EM), Professor Alexander Nehamas
- ANT: "Global Greece: Human Encounters and Cultural Exchange" (SA), Dr. Nikos Michailidis

The program also includes excursions to historic sites across Greece, as well as access to museums, libraries and cultural institutions. This opportunity is perfect for students wishing to study abroad during their sophomore year. It is also ideal for all students who have fall obligations and spring flexibility.

Space is limited. Contact Jordan Zilla in the Office of International Programs at jzilla@princeton.edu for more details.
